U.S. Secret Service

Testimony of Mr. Bruce A. Townsend
Special Agent in Charge - Financial Crimes Division

For Presentation to the Subcommittee on Commerce, Trade and Consumer Protection
U.S. House of Representatives

May 23, 2001

Mr. Chairman, members of the Subcommittee, thank you for the opportunity to address the Subcommittee on the subject of on-line fraud and associated crimes and the Secret Service's efforts to combat this problem.

In addition to providing the highest level of physical protection to our nation's leaders, the Secret Service exercises broad investigative jurisdiction over a variety of financial crimes. As the original guardian of our nation's financial payment systems, the Secret Service has a long history of pursuing those who would victimize our financial institutions and law abiding citizens. In recent years, the combination of the information technology revolution and the effects of globalization have caused the investigative mission of the Secret Service to evolve in a manner that cannot be overstated.

Mr. Chairman, we in the Secret Service applaud your efforts in convening this hearing today. We stand ready to work with you and all the members of the subcommittee in addressing this issue. It is our belief that hearings such as this will be the catalyst to bring together the resources of the state and Federal Governments, and the private sector in a unified response to this issue.

Burgeoning use of the Internet and advanced technologies has promoted greater competition within the financial sector. Although this provides benefits to the consumer through readily available credit, and consumer oriented financial services, it also creates a rich environment for today's sophisticated criminals, many of whom are organized and operate across international borders.

Information collection has become a common byproduct of the newly emerging e-commerce. Internet purchases, credit card sales, and other forms of electronic transactions are being captured, stored, and analyzed by entrepreneurs intent on increasing their market share. The result is a growing business sector for promoting the buying and selling of personal information.

With the advent of the Internet, companies have been created for the sole purpose of data mining, data warehousing, and brokering of this information. These companies collect a wealth of information about consumers, including information as confidential as their medical histories. Consumers routinely provide personal, financial, and health information to companies engaged in business on the Internet. Consumers may not realize that the information they provide in credit card applications, loan applications, or with merchants they patronize, is a valuable commodity in this new age of information trading.

The Internet provides the anonymity all criminals desire. In the past, fraud schemes required false identification documents, and necessitated a "face to face" exchange of information and identity verification. Now with just a laptop and a modem, criminals are capable of perpetrating a variety of financial crimes without identity documents through the use of stolen personal information.

The Secret Service has investigated several cases where cyber criminals have hacked into Internet merchants' sites and stolen the personal information and credit card account numbers of their customers. These account numbers are then used with supporting personal information to order merchandise that is then shipped throughout the world. Most account holders are not aware that their credit card accounts have been compromised until they receive their billing statement.

In an investigation conducted in April 2001, Secret Service Agents from the Lexington, Kentucky, Resident Office, along with their local law enforcement partners from the Richmond, Kentucky, Police Department, arrested a suspect who was operating an on-line auction selling counterfeit sports memorabilia. During this investigation it was learned that the suspect had fraudulently opened a number of credit card accounts utilizing the personal information of individuals with whom he had dealt over the Internet.

Cyber criminals are also using information hacked from sites on the Internet to extort money from companies. It is not unprecedented for international hackers to hack into business accounts, steal thousands of credit card account numbers along with the accompanying personal identifiers, then threaten the companies with exposure unless the hackers are paid a substantial amount of money.

Today we are faced with another new challenge--that of identity theft. Time and time again, criminals have demonstrated the ability to obtain information from businesses conducting commerce on the Internet. This information has been used to facilitate account takeover schemes and other similar frauds. It has become a frightening reality that one individual can literally take over another individual's financial identity without the victim's knowledge.

We in the Secret Service view identity theft as a disturbing combination of old schemes and abuse of emerging technologies. However, it should be clear--this crime is about more than the theft of money or property. This crime is about the theft of something that cannot be so easily replaced--a person's good name, a reputation in the community--years of hard work and commitment to goals. Make no mistake about it, this crime is a particularly invasive crime that can leave victims picking up the pieces of their lives for months or years afterward.

In an investigation that illustrates the potential for significant losses to the public, agents of the Secret Service Los Angeles International Fraud Task Force recently arrested four suspects for their role in a scheme that involved fraudulently opening lines of credit for six different businesses. Further investigation revealed that the businesses were fictitious, and the individual identities associated with them had been fraudulently taken over by the suspects. It was also discovered that the suspects had used the personal identifiers of these supposed company officers to obtain auto and business loans, student loans, and open credit card accounts, resulting in an actual loss of more than $1.4 million. Pursuant to the execution of several seizure warrants, more than $360,000 cash and three luxury vehicles were seized from the suspects for forfeiture. A fifth suspect could not be located, and it has since been determined that he has fled the country.

Congress has already taken an important step in providing increased protection for the victims of identity theft through the enhancements made to Title 18, United States Code, Section 1028 by the Identity Theft and Assumption Deterrence Act, which was signed into law in October of 1998. This law accomplished four things simultaneously. First, it identified people whose credit had been compromised as true victims. Historically with financial crimes such as bank fraud or credit card fraud, the victim identified by statute, was the person, business or financial institution that lost the money. All too often the victims of identity theft whose credit was destroyed, were not recognized as victims. This is no longer the case.

Second, this law established the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) as the one central point of contact for these victims to report all instances of identity theft. This collection of data on all ID theft cases allows for the identification of systemic weaknesses and the ability of law enforcement to retrieve investigative data from one central location. It further allows the FTC to provide people with the information and assistance they need in order to take the steps necessary to correct their credit records.

Third, this law provided increased sentencing potential and enhanced asset forfeiture provisions. These enhancements help to reach prosecutorial thresholds and allow for the return of funds to victims.

Lastly, this law closed a loophole in Title 18, United States Code, Section 1028 by making it illegal to steal another person's personal identification information with the intent to commit a violation. Previously, under Section 1028 only the production or possession of false identity documents was prohibited. With advances in technology such as E-Commerce and the Internet, criminals today do not need actual documents to assume an identity.

We believe this legislation is an important factor in bringing together the Federal and state governments in a focused and unified response to the identity theft problem. Today, law enforcement, regulatory and community assistance organizations have joined forces through a variety of working groups, task forces, and information sharing initiatives to assist victims of identity theft. Victims no longer have to feel abandoned, with no where to turn.

The Secret Service continues to attack identity theft by aggressively pursuing core violations. It is by the successful investigation of criminals involved in financial and computer fraud that we are able to identify and suppress identity theft.

Using compromised financial identities of people from all walks of life, criminals purchase everything from cars to computers to homes. Agents in our Birmingham Field Office are working an identity theft case involving fraudulent credit card purchases. During this investigation, agents have determined that the suspects used the stolen identity of an innocent party to obtain a $400,000 mortgage to purchase a home in the Birmingham area. Further investigation has determined that the suspects were in the process of obtaining seven additional home loans using other identities, with an aggregate value of $2.1 million.

As stated earlier, identity theft, and the use of false identification has become an integral component of most financial criminal activity. In order to be successful in suppressing identity theft, we believe law enforcement agencies should continue to focus their energy and available resources on the criminal activities that incorporate the misuse or theft of identification information. The Secret Service has achieved success through a consistent three -tiered process of aggressive pro-active investigations, identification of systemic weaknesses, and partnerships with the financial sector.

Our investigative program focuses on three areas of criminal schemes within our core expertise. First, the Secret Service emphasizes the investigation of counterfeit instruments. By counterfeit instruments, I am referring to counterfeit currency, counterfeit checks--both commercial and government--counterfeit credit cards, counterfeit stocks or bonds, and virtually any negotiable instrument that can be counterfeited. Many counterfeiting schemes would not be possible without the compromise of the financial identities of innocent victims. Second, the Secret Service targets organized criminal groups that are engaged in financial crimes on both a national and international scale. Again, we see many of these groups use stolen financial and personal information to further their financial crime activity.

Finally, we focus our resources on community impact cases. The Secret Service works in concert with the state, county, and local police departments to ensure our resources are being targeted to those criminal areas that are of a high concern to the local citizenry. Further, we work very closely with both federal and local prosecutors to ensure that our investigations are relevant, topical and prosecutable under existing guidelines. No area today is more relevant or topical than that of identity theft.

It has been our experience that the criminal groups involved in these types of crimes routinely operate in a multi-jurisdictional environment. This has created problems for local law enforcement who generally respond first to criminal activities. By working closely with other federal, state, and local law enforcement, as well as international police agencies, we are able to provide a comprehensive network of intelligence sharing, resource sharing, and technical expertise that bridges jurisdictional boundaries.

This partnership approach to law enforcement is exemplified by our financial crimes task forces located throughout the country. Each of these task forces pools the personnel and technical resources to maximize the expertise of each participating law enforcement agency. A number of these task forces are focused on the West African criminal element operating in this country. As mentioned earlier, this particular ethnic criminal group has historically been involved in a myriad of financial crimes, which incorporate false identification and identity theft.

In addition to our interdependent working relationship with law enforcement on all levels, our partnership with the private sector has proved invaluable. Representatives from numerous commercial sectors, including the financial, telecommunications, and computer industries, have all pledged their support for finding ways to ensure consumer protection while minimizing corporate losses. The Secret Service has entered into several cooperative efforts with representatives of the financial sector to address challenges posed by new and emerging technologies.

In conjunction with these technological advances, the Secret Service is actively involved in a number of government sponsored initiatives. At the request of the Attorney General, the Secret Service joined an Identity Theft Subcommittee of the Attorney General's White Collar Crime Council.

This group, which is made up of federal and state law enforcement, regulatory, and professional agencies, meets regularly to discuss and coordinate investigative and prosecutorial strategies as well as consumer education programs.

We in the Secret Service pledge to continue to work with the Congress, with our domestic and global law enforcement partners, and with the private sector, to stay abreast of emerging hi-tech threats to the citizens we serve.

Mr. Chairman, this concludes my prepared statement. I would be happy to answer any questions that you or any other member of the subcommittee may have. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman, members of the Subcommittee, thank you for the opportunity to address the Subcommittee on the subject of on-line fraud and associated crimes and the Secret Service's efforts to combat this problem.

In addition to providing the highest level of physical protection to our nation's leaders, the Secret Service exercises broad investigative jurisdiction over a variety of financial crimes. It is our belief that hearings such as this will be the catalyst to bring together the resources of the state and Federal Governments, and the private sector in a unified response to this issue.

Burgeoning use of the Internet and advanced technologies, has led to fierce competition within the financial sector. Consumers routinely provide personal, financial, and health information to companies engaged in business on the Internet. Consumers may not realize that the information they provide in credit card applications, loan applications, or with merchants they patronize, is a valuable commodity in this new age of information trading.

Data collection companies, like all businesses, are profit motivated, and as such, may be more concerned with generating potential customers rather than the misuse of this information by unscrupulous individuals. This readily available personal information in conjunction with the customer friendly marketing environment has presented ample opportunities for criminals intent on exploiting the situation for economic gain.

The Internet provides the anonymity all criminals desire. In the past, fraud schemes required false identification documents, and necessitated a "face to face" exchange of information and identity verification. Now with just a laptop and modem, criminals are capable of perpetrating a variety of financial crimes without identity documents through the use of stolen personal information.

Courtney, given the amount of work involved, I would encourage that we have 2 people do the next slate, particularly since that slate has so many names. I leave that decision to you all, but doing so would make life easier on Rachel, lessen the chance of any mistakes, and involve another lawyer in our office in this rather interesting part of our job.

Subject: Communites of Character Question

Brett,

Per our discussion this afternoon, we (the Office of Strategic Initiatives) are currently helping plan for a fall presidential initiative that is tentatively entitled "Communities of Character" (it would serve as an umbrella for programs/rhetoric relating to renewing America's values/civic life). During our research, I came across the web site of an organization named Communities of Character. We need guidance from your office on any copyright/trademark issues that might arise as a result of that group's existence. The web site link is below. Please let me know if any further information would be helpful. A senior staff working group is meeting early next week on this initiative, so having an answer by the weekend would be great if possible. Thank you.

Senate Judiciary Committee Olympics Field Hearing

"The 2002 Olympics - Cooperation Between Federal, State, Local, and Private Agencies to Address Public Safety Concerns"

May 31, 2001

Opening Statement:

Good afternoon, Senator Hatch, members of the Committee, and law enforcement colleagues. It is a pleasure to be with you today to discuss security preparations for the 2002 Winter Olympics in Salt Lake City, Utah. As you know from my previous briefings in Washington, D.C., major special events are a high priority for the FBI. We have been heavily involved in coordinated threat assessment and security proceedings for the 2002 Winter Olympics. Today, I'd like to concentrate my remarks on the Olympic Counterterrorism Center, the Olympic Joint Terrorism Task Force, and Command Post and Field Training exercises, as they relate to interagency cooperation and public safety.

Since the International Olympic Committee (IOC) selected Salt Lake City to stage the 2002 Winter Olympic Games on June 19, 1995, the FBI has undertaken significant counterterrorism planning in an effort to help ensure the safety and security of this major international sporting event. Leading the FBI's planning efforts in Salt Lake City is SAC Don Johnson, an active member of the Utah Olympic Public Safety Command (UOPSC). He is assisted in this effort by the FBI's Olympic Planning Squad which addresses all matters relating to FBI involvement, interagency cooperation, and support to the Games. The members of this squad are assigned full time to Olympic planning and are directly responsible for coordinating programs in the areas of: theater wide tactical planning, public safety training, communications systems, infrastructure protection, intelligence, weapons of mass destruction, explosive ordinance disposal, aviation support, media affairs, and accreditation, as well as a numerous other Olympic planning functions.

With an anticipated daily attendance in excess of 174,000 spectators, the participation of some 3,500 athletes from over 80 nations, and daily support provided by over 20,000 organizers and planners, the 2002 Olympic Winter Games easily qualifies as a world class sporting event. Coverage by over 9,000 media representatives broadcasting to a television audience in excess of 3.5 billion viewers will catapult these Games onto the world stage. Planning for the public safety and security of the Games has required an unprecedented level of cooperation and coordination among the myriad of local, state and federal law enforcement entities with responsibilities associated with the Games. There exists an unquestioned consensus among these agencies that it is impossible for any single law enforcement agency to possess all the resources required and expertise necessary to accomplish this task alone.

Planning for the public safety and security essential for hosting a safe and successful Games has long been recognized as every agency's primary objective. However, in the process of planning for the realization of this goal I believe that each of the law enforcement agencies involved has already accomplished something of equal importance. I am speaking of the partnerships that have been created at all levels of law enforcement which have been required to advance the Olympic public safety and security planning process. These partnerships will exist as a legacy long after the 17 days of the XIX Olympiad have past. I would like to briefly illustrate for you today how these partnerships have been built and how they have served to create a truly integrated Olympic Public Safety and Security Plan.

The Olympic Counterterrorism Center:

REV_00274144

I sincerely believe that every agency involved has done everything in its power to help in the realization of a safe and secure Olympics. From the outset each agency recognized, due to the unique jurisdictional, legislative and budgetary issues as well as widely different agency capabilities, that Olympic public safety and security planning would require an immense amount of interagency communication and cooperation. In 1998, in the spirit of interagency cooperation, the FBI entered into a multi-year lease for office space to house the Olympic Coordination Center, Olympic Counterterrorism Center, the FBI Critical Incident Command Post, and the Joint Operations Center. This facility houses representatives of state, local, and federal agencies in a coordinated effort to address Olympic planning, preparation, and execution. To further this communication, the FBI is obtaining Top Secret security clearances for fifty local, state and federal partners to alleviate in advance any impediment to the open and complete sharing of information which may impact Olympic public safety.

The Olympic Joint Terrorism Task Force:

Another planning and operational requirement identified early on in the process was the need to combine and coordinate law enforcement capabilities from agencies at all levels to be able to rapidly assess threats and investigate significant incidents during the games. In May 2000, the FBI established the Olympic Joint Terrorism Task Force (OJTTF). The OJTTF is currently comprised of over 40 full and part-time local, state, and federal law enforcement officers and agents representing dozens of agencies and jurisdictions. Task forces, by design, are excellent vehicles for bringing to bear the specialized resources of each member's parent agency. The OJTTF is capable of collecting and analyzing intelligence, and investigating matters in virtually any jurisdiction at any level. This ability has been proven to enhance law enforcement efforts across the country and will serve to greatly enhance Olympic public safety and security operations. Again, the FBI has requested Top Secret clearances for all members of the OJTTF to better facilitate this joint working environment.

Command Post and Field Training Exercises:

REV_00274145

Other than the military, perhaps no other public entity understands as well as law enforcement the profound impact and absolute necessity of quality training. Moving from the conceptual stages of Olympic public safety and security planning to operational readiness demands that all plans be tested in concert in an effort to identify areas that may need to be revised or enhanced. In November 2000, the FBI in close coordination with UOPSC invited all Olympic public safety planners to participate in a Command Post Exercise (CPX) designed primarily to test interagency communications and information flow in a limited nonoperational setting. This exercise was prefaced by initial training by all agencies on advanced information systems that will be utilized during the games.

In April 2001, after analyzing lessons learned in November and improving the plan, a full scale Field Training Exercise (FTX) was again jointly hosted by the FBI and all members of UOPSC. This exercise, involving more than 1,600 persons over a three-day period, tested all aspects of the Olympic public safety and security plan. Unlike the CPX, the FTX not only tested concepts and theoretical procedures, it fully exercised actual physical responses to threats and staged incidents as may occur during the games. This afforded all participating agency personnel the opportunity to fulfill their role in the overall plan simultaneously. Tactical teams exercised strategic assaults while investigators gathered evidence and processed crime scenes. Crisis management specialists coordinated with consequence management officials to first control, then manage, then mitigate the effects of a major hazardous materials scene. Federal venue security designers and local venue commanders worked together to manage a wide variety of incidents occurring at actual Olympic venues. And, as in November, the FTX afforded personnel from all agencies the opportunity to further refine their skills on Olympic information systems which provide the backbone for interagency communication during the Games. Continuing to provide quality training, the Salt Lake City Division will be hosting a weapons of mass destruction conference in Salt Lake City in June and is contemplating hosting another command post exercise in the fall of this year.

REV_00274146

As the lead federal agency responsible for crisis management, intelligence, hostage rescue, and the investigation of acts of terrorism, the FBI is resolved to continuing to promote effective interagency cooperation. Collectively, our goal is to ensure that all reasonable preparations and contingency plans are in place to create an environment throughout Salt Lake City, the state of Utah, and the entire nation in which we may host a safe and successful 2002 Winter Olympic Games.

In closing, I would like to express my sincere appreciation for the support afforded by this committee to the FBI and all law enforcement agencies engaged in the partnership that is Olympic public safety and security planning. I would also like to express my appreciation and admiration of the professionalism which law enforcement personnel at all levels have demonstrated throughout this process. With 253 days remaining before the Olympic flame enters the stadium, I believe we are already realizing one of the greatest benefits of the Games: the ability to bring people together; in this case the ability for law enforcement agencies in Utah and across the nation to exponentially magnify their effectiveness by working together. I am confident that all agencies join me in hoping that our first great dividend of this ability will be a safe and secure XIX Olympiad.
